

Rashid Kysia, MD, MPH, MA

Rashid Kysia, MD, MPH, MA, is an emergency physician at Cook County Health who has worked in global health and public health equity for 25 years. He completed graduate public health work at University of Michigan and worked to develop a refugee health project in Detroit prior to studying medicine at Wayne State University. Dr. Kysia completed his training in emergency medicine at Harvard/Massachusetts General Hospital. He has been a teaching as an attending physician at Cook County Health (John H. Stroger Jr. Hospital of Cook County) for 15 years and is an assistant professor of Emergency Medicine at Rush University.