

Meeta Shah, MD

Meeta Shah, MD, is an emergency medicine physician and associate chief medical informatics officer at Rush University Medical Center in Chicago. She has more than 10 years of experience in both community and academic emergency departments. Dr. Shah obtained her undergraduate degree from the University of Western Ontario. She went to medical school at the Indiana University School of Medicine and moved to Chicago where she completed her emergency medicine residency. Her professional career has involved working in informatics, teaching medical students and other learners in the emergency department. She has an interest in improving work life balance for physicians and optimizing workflows to improve efficiency. In her spare time she enjoys authoring OpEd pieces when time allows and is currently a Public Voices fellow through The OpEd Project.